

The devotion of Stūpas

Kay Thi Kyaw,¹ Thandar Htwe²

Abstract

It was the devotion of the Stūpas the Buddhism made its own. When the Buddha began to be worshipped in the form of an image. According to tradition Stūpas were built by the recipients over the divided ashes of the Buddha. Our Ominiscience Buddha made starting to fulfill his perfection. In assening the Stūpas from the religious point of view rather than from the point of view of literature or history, it will be found that it is invaluable. This is a research that will continue to take place of importance in the heart of new generations.

Key Words: “Stūpas, devotion, worshipped”

Introduction

The term Cetī derived from the Pāli word ‘Cetiya’ and Sanskrit word ‘Caitya’. It is grammatically analyzed Cita+ṇya.

The meaning of Stūpa

Pāli term derived from thūpa > pūtha > pūtho method of vaṇṇavipariyāya.³ Stūpa, means sacred depository, shrine, relic. The Stūpas are divided into three kinds as follow:

(1) Paribhogacetī

(2) Dhātucetī

(3) Uddissacetī.⁴

Cetiya means a sepulchral monument but with its extended meaning it includes sārīrika (bodily relics of the Buddha), Paribhoga cetiya (a thing used by the Buddha), Uddissaka (a thing made sacred by dedication). Uddissaka again is of many varieties- the images of the Buddha made in various postures as suggested by his life stories form the major kind of uddissaka and so too are the votive tablets. Besides, dhamma cetiya (a memorial in honour of the Law).⁵

The devotion of Stūpas

The whole top which is known as the śikhara looks like the Mahābodhi stupa of Buddha Gaya. On each side of the śikhara grow Bodhi trees and two lotus buds hang from the pillars that stand on either side of the Buddha. There is a beaded border and the whole scene depicts the Enlightenment of the Buddha.⁶

The stūpa began as an earthen burial mound, which was revered by the local population and we have seen that the devotion of stūpas was taken up by Buddhism, and that Aśoka raised stūpas in the Buddha's honour all over India. Only one stūpa, in Nepal, survives in the form in which the great emperor left it, but excavations of existing stūpas have shown the character of the earlier ones. They were large hemispherical domes, containing a small central chamber, in which the relics of the Buddha were placed in a casket, often beautifully carved in crystal. The core of the stūpa was of unburnt brick, and the outer face of burnt brick, covered with a thick layer of plaster. The stūpa was crowned by an umbrella of wood or stone, and was surrounded by a wooden fence enclosing a path for the ceremonial clockwise circumambulation (pradakṣinā), which was the chief form of reverence paid to the relics within it.

In the period between the Maurya and the Gupta much wealth and energy were spent on Buddhist architecture and the older stūpas were greatly enlarged and beautified. Of these three are specially noteworthy those at Bhārhut and Sānchī in Madhya Pradesh, and at Amarāvātī in the lower Kistnā Valley. The Bhārhut stūpa perhaps in its present form dating from the middle of the 2nd century B.C, is important chiefly for its sculpture, and the stūpa itself has now vanished. That at Sānchī, on the other hand, is one of the most striking architectural remains of ancient India.

In the 2nd century B.C the old Sānchī stūpa was enlarged to twice its original size, becoming a hemisphere of about 120 feet in diameter. It was then faced with well-cut masonry laid in regular courses, and besides the lower path on ground level, an upper terraced path some 16 feet from the ground was added. The old wooden railings were replaced by stone ones 9 feet high, tenoned and mortised in imitation of carpentry. Finally, towards the end of the 1st century B.C, four glorious gateways were added at the four cardinal points. Lesser stūpas and monastic buildings surrounded the great stūpa.

The Sānchī gateways are perhaps more noteworthy for their carved ornamentation than their architecture. Each consists of two square columns, above which are three curved architraves supported by animals or dwarfs, the whole reaching some 34 feet above ground level. The construction of these gateways, from the technical point of view, is primitive, and it has been suggested that their design is based on the log or bamboo portcullis of the ancient Indian village. The finish, on the other hand, is remarkably good, and the carvings are among the most fresh and vigorous products of the Indian sculptor.

In respect of size few Indian stūpas greatly exceed that of Sānchī, but in Ceylon the stūpa reached tremendous proportions. The Abhayagīrī Dāgāba at Anurādhapura, the capital of the early kings of Ceylon, was 327 feet in diameter, and larger than some of the pyramids of Egypt. It reached its present size, after a succession of enlargements, in the 2nd Century A.D.¹

In India stūpa architecture became more and more ornate. The stūpa of Amarāvati, which in its final form was completed A.D 200, was larger than that of Sānchī, and it was adorned with carved panels (some of which can be seen in the British Museum telling the story of the life of the Buddha. Mean-while in Northern India stūpas grew taller in proportion to their bases. They were often set on square platforms, which in Burma and Indonesia were developed into stepped pyramids, the largest of which is the enormous stūpa of Borobodūr, in Jāva, built in the 8th century A.D. Pinnacles became higher, and developed towards the spiring forms of the presented day temples of Myanmar and Thailand.²

Of later Indian stūpa the two most famous are those of Sārnāth and Nālandā. Of the tall stūpa of Sārnāth near Vārāṇasī, the scene of the Buddha's first sermon, now little more than the inner core remains. It was once a most imposing structure of beautifully patterned brickwork with a high cylindrical upper dome rising from a lower hemispherical one, and with large images of the Buddha set in gable ends at the cardinal points. In its final form it dates from the Gupta period. The Stūpa at Nālandā seven times successively enlarged, in its present ruined state gives the impression of a brick pyramid with steps leading up to its terraces. It was originally a tall stūpa raised on a high base, with a smaller stūpa at each corner, but the monument underwent so many alterations in Gupta and pāla times that it is now difficult devotion for the untrained eye to recognize its original form at any one stage of its development.³

Around the great stūpas were lesser ones, often containing the ashes of monks famous for their piety and learning, and a whole complex of buildings monasteries, shrine-rooms, preaching halls and rest houses for pilgrims.⁴At the greater Buddhist sites such as Nālandā the groups of monastic buildings were usually surrounded by fortress-like walls.⁵

In their present partial, dilapidation the heavy domes of the great stūpas sometimes seem a little forbidding. Originally the lime-washed or plastered stūpa shone brilliantly white in the tropical sunlight, its pinnacle, now generally broken, rising like a golden spear from the ceremonial stone umbrella on top of the dome. Then it must have given a different impression. The great Runanvāli Dāgabā at Anurādhapura in Ceylon, which in recent years has been restored and is once more used in Buddhist worship, rising white in the distance out of the plain, shows the stūpa at its best, as a worthy emblem of a great religion.¹

Conclusion

The stūpas is the land mark of the Buddha Sāsana. It is rather a matter of surprise that it was only five hundred years after the Buddha's death that a theology developed which gave full recognition to this state of affairs.
